Ann Rosegrant Alvarez is on faculty at the Wayne State University School of Social Work, where she is Interim Associate Dean and Co-Chair of the Concentration on Community Practice and Social Action. Dr. Alvarez is a Midwest Regiona H. MacNgua-}

ITIVE on the ACOSA Board, and is the Chair Designate of the Commission on the Role and Status of Women, within the Council on Social Work Education. Through a comprehensive proposal submission process, she has recently been awarded a grant to write the history of Affilie: Journal of Women and Social Work. Her practice experience has been primarily in community organizing and administration in the Philippines, Louisiana, and Michigan, where she has worked with and on behalf of street kids, schoolchil-

Lories, and the elderly. Her research and teaching interests include feminist social work, social work history, and multi-cultural community organizing.

Lorraine M. Gutierrez, MA, PhD, has a joint appointment with the School of Social Work and Department of Psychology at the University of Michigan and is a faculty associate in American Culture. She is also the Faculty Director of the Edward Ginsberg Center for Community Service Learning at the University of Michigan. She brings to her teaching over twenty years of social work practice and research in multiethnic communities. She was recently selected as the Thurman Professor at the University of Michigan. Current projects include identifying methods for multicultural organizational development and community practice, defining multicultural education for social work practice, and identifying the linkages between gender ideology and attitudes toward social justice. She has published over thirty articles, chapters or books on topics such as empowerment, multi-cultural practice, and women of color. She has been actively involved in publishing in social work and has had editorial responsibilities with over ten journals. She is also a Fellow in the Society for Community Research and Action, an international organization of community psychologists.

Alice K. Johnson is a Professor at the Jane Addams College of Social Work, University of Illinois at Chicago. Her research in the United States focuses on policy and service delivery for homeless families, as well as innovative teaching methods and curriculum development in community practice. Currently, Dr. Johnson is completing a book on social welfare policy and the dynamics of poverty in the lives of homeless, and working poor families. Her international work includes technical assistance, training, and research on the nonprofit sector and child welfare organizations in Romania. Currently, she is Principal Investigator of a university-to-university partnership grant to establish the first-ever graduate degree work at Addis Ababa University in Ethiopia. She is a member of the National Board of Advisors of Influencing State Policy (INFLUENCE). The author of more than 35 journal articles and book chapters, Dr. Johnson is on the Editorial Board of the Journal of Sociology & Social Welfare. She also served as a consulting editor for Social Work Research from 1995—2002.

David P. Moxley has served on the faculty of the Wayne State University School of Social Work (Detroit, Michigan) for the past 16 years, and co-chairs the Program on Community Practice and Social Action. He works collaboratively with mental health consumers and state and local mental health authorities to create resources, services, and support that consumers operate together or in partnership with professionals to achieve practical outcomes like recovery, education, homes, friendships, employment, and quality of life. One of his most recent books is Case Management by Design (Nelson Hall, 1997), which outlines principles of consumer-driven service delivery and community support. He is co-author of the forthcoming book, Keeping Students in Higher Education: Successful Strategies and Practices for Retention (Kogan-Page), and co-editor with Dr. John Finch of the Sourcebook on Rehabilitation and Mental Health Practice (Plenum).